Welcome to Stanford University

Thank you for joining us! We know that coming to Stanford marks an important and exciting transition in your student's life and in your life as well. The following events are intended to offer parents and families an appreciation for the University's intellectual life, community, resources, and cherished traditions. We hope that you will learn more about Stanford, meet other families, and enjoy your day on campus.

PLANNING YOUR VISIT

New Student Orientation (NSO) events for parents and families take place on the first day of NSO and are listed in this program, as well as at orientation.stanford.edu. After moving your student into their residence, we invite you to enjoy our beautiful campus by stopping by the Move-In Mingle and ending the day with us at the Opening Convocation Ceremony and the Dinner with the Provost for Parents & Families.

The conclusion of the Convocation Ceremony is the traditional time for students and families to say your goodbyes. Your student will have their First Dinner and required House Meeting that evening. Students will be engaged in required NSO events for the remainder of the week and you should not make plans with them.

PARKING

After unloading and moving your student into their dorm, move your car to the Galvez Parking Lot (294 Galvez St.), located near the venues for the Convocation Ceremony and the Dinner with the Provost, where many of you will end your day. Display the 2026 NSO Parking Pass in your car for free all-day parking in the Galvez Lot. Please remember to lock your vehicle. Do not leave any valuables in your car and remove any bags from view.

Stanford's free Marguerite shuttles will take you from the Galvez Lot back to the residences. Shuttles will run every 15-20 minutes from 8:00 a.m. – 7:00 p.m. Stops are marked on the Stanford Move-In Google Map, qrco.de/2026MoveIn. For real-time shuttle information, call the Marguerite dispatch line at (650) 724-4309.

GETTING AROUND CAMPUS

Move-In Map

Download the Stanford Mobile app and use the searchable campus map to find campus locations, eateries, restrooms, and walking tours. You can also scan this NSO QR code for the Stanford Move-In Google Map to find student dorms, NSO shuttle stops, and NSO venues, qrco.de/2026Moveln.

For disability access information and assistance, please call (650) 725-0326 or contact disability.access@stanford.edu. If you did not arrange in advance for assistance to the Convocation Ceremony, we encourage you to ride the free Marguerite shuttles to Frost Amphitheater.

10 Suggestions for New Stanford Parents

Staff and faculty involved with Stanford families and their students offer the following tips for new Stanford parents to support their students and help them to succeed in college.

- 1. Let go. Let them make their own decisions, solve their own problems, pick their own courses and, eventually, choose their own major. When they do choose a major, let the choice be based on intellectual passion, not perceptions of which major is safest or most pragmatic.
- 2. Listen and reassure. At some point in their first year, many students feel overwhelmed. They may call home, fearing their admission was a mistake. We hear this often. Listen, encourage, and reassure. Suggest they talk to their Academic Advisor, Resident Fellow, or Resident Director. Remind them of the support resources at Stanford, such as tutoring, academic skills coaching, wellness coaching, and counseling.
- 3. Have conversations about lifestyle choices, especially alcohol and cannabis use. Surveys show that most Stanford students use alcohol responsibly or not at all. Nevertheless, problems like binge drinking are challenges at Stanford, too. Talk to your student about the choices they are likely to face and help them determine what they value in their own behavior and that of others.
- 4. Encourage them to get to know faculty members. The academic program at Stanford is designed to encourage close interaction between students and faculty. From small introductory seminars to faculty visits in the residences, Stanford offers opportunities for faculty engagement. Surveys show that students who develop close relationships with faculty get more out of their Stanford education than students who do not.
- 5. Encourage them to learn for the sake of learning. Stanford's general education requirements are designed to encourage intellectual exploration. Many students are accustomed to collecting credentials needed for college admission. Suggest that they study a subject they have never studied before – they may discover new passions and interests.
- 6. Stay in touch, but perhaps not too much. Between their busy schedules and changes in their sleeping patterns, it may be hard to reach them. Help foster their growing independence by being in touch less frequently than you are used to. And don't be surprised if your calls, e-mails, and text messages go unreturned.
- 7. Don't focus on grades. When you do talk to your students, try not to focus on grades. Ask which faculty members they have met, which classes they enjoy, what they are learning, and what they are doing for fun. Stanford students put plenty of pressure on themselves. What they need to know from you is that you believe in them.
- 8. Help them learn the difference between disappointment and failure. Many Stanford students are used to being the smartest person in their class. At some point, they will experience something they will choose to label as failure – perhaps their first “C” in a course – even if it is not. Assure them that their best effort is all you expect.
- 9. Join the Stanford Parents' Club. Your student is not the only one who can benefit from finding community and making new friends. Visit stanfordparentsclub.org to learn more.
- 10. Call us if you are concerned or need reassurance. Colleges and universities are severely limited by federal law about what information about students they can share with parents. Nevertheless, if you are concerned about your student or need some reassurance, contact the Parent & Family Help Line at (650) 725-0649 or email mykidis@stanford.edu.
